News of Petersburg

Times-Dispatch Bureau, 109 North Sycamore Street, Petersburg, Va., October 31.

In the Hastings Courtroom to-day Judge J. M. Mullen, sitting unofficially, heard statements by leaders of the two factions in the congregation of the Harrison Street colored Baptist Church relative to the serious and long-continued troubles in that church. Counsel of the two factions were present, but it was agreed that they should remain quiet, and that the representatives of the opposing factions should speak for themselves. Judge Mullen referred to the long existing troubles in the church, which have not only threatened the life and usefulness of the church itself, but the peace and good order of the community, and said they ought to be ended. In order to reach a solution of the premises he wanted to hear both sides. From time to time representatives of one side or the other had come to him, giving their version of the troubles, and to believe one would be to discredit the other, and vice versa. He wanted, therefore, not ex officio, but as a citizen, to hear and to suggest what ought to be done to settle these unfortunate differences and troubles in the interest of the church and of the community.

Two men from each side were selected to speak for their respective factions. E. W. Fowles, anti-Tartite, was the first speaker. He said this hearing was what he and his side had been contending for for two years. They had been accused of many disgraceful things. One of them, and the meanest of all, that of stealing the church money. The judge asked Fowles to confine himself to facts and conclusions, and the speaker then went into a full history of the troubles since 1904—the financial matters over which the troubles arose, the charges of thievery which had been made by Tartite and his friends against the old deacons; the efforts that had been made to preserve harmony, the arbitrary expulsion of deacons, the violations of the provisions of the church constitution, the threats of Pastor Tartite to destroy that constitution; Pastor Tartite's officious and contemptuous conduct, his alleged violent abuse of his opponents from the pulpit, referring to them as "islanders," "liars" and "devils"; the presence of the police at business meeting to prevent violence, etc. The speaker declared that Tartite had never qualified as pastor of the church or shown his credentials as a member in good standing of the church.

Deacon Webb, a representative of the Tartite faction, spoke for that side. His statement of facts was in direct contradiction of what Fowles had said. He said that all the troubles in the church arose over financial matters; that the confusion and disorder at the church meetings were caused by a mob of anti-Tartites organized under leaders; that the large majority of the men and women of the church upheld Tartite and want him as pastor; that the course and conduct of the minority have poisoned the majority against them, and that there will be no satisfactory relations between the factions hereafter, even though Tartite went away, or was locked up in torment. The deacon stated that he knew nothing of Tartite's alleged abuse of members from the pulpit, but, in answer to a question by the judge, that if Tartite had ever used the language in the pulpit attributed to him, whether he would consider him fit to be there, he said he would not. He thought Tartite to be a right and a Christian. The deacon explained that the reason why no business meetings had been recently held in the church was that the opposition would not let them be peaceably held.

Two other representatives were heard, and they spoke along the same lines as the first two. When they had concluded the judge made some suggestions. He said that the differences between the two factions, as set forth in the statements of their representatives, are irreconcilable, and he could only advise in the matter. The troubles are serious, and unless ended, serious results might follow and the strong arm of the law be called in. They must be settled by the church under its constitution and laws. The majority must rule, and if the result is a large withdrawal of members from the church, he suggested as a proper solution of the church differences and troubles that the factions get together, select an impartial and disinterested man, white or black, as a moderator to preside over a meeting to be held for the settlement of the pastoral and other questions. If Tartite presents his credentials as a member in good standing in the church and a majority of the members vote to retain him, that will be the result. He does not, and is not a member in good standing, the only course to pursue to elect him as pastor is to change the constitution. This is a matter for the church to decide for itself. One or the other of these two methods must be resorted to, and that quickly.

The suggestions of the judge will be accepted and the meeting held. The final result of the bitter church troubles will be the disruption of the congregation and the formation of a new church.

It is to be hoped that the suggestions and advice of the judge may result in the permanent settlement of the troubles in this church, which have been a source of uneasiness in the community for years. Injunctions have been issued, fines and jail sentences have been imposed, the charges of fire departments have been called out to prevent violence in the church and disperse the meetings, and even the church has at times been closed to the assembling of congregations.

The dedicatory address will be delivered by Dr. M. E. Davis, of Richmond. It is expected that Governor Claude A. Swanson, Superintendent of Public Instruction J. B. Eggleston and members of the board of visitors will be present and speak.

He suggested that all members of the club who were entitled to a vote in the coming election should go home and cast their ballot for Bryan, Kern and Kitchin. JAIL DELIVERY IN ACCOMAC COUNTY.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

ONANCOCK, Va., October 31.—Deputy Sheriff Lilliston upon going to the County Jail Thursday morning found that eight of the nine prisoners—two white and six colored—had escaped during the night. One white man, serving a sentence for selling liquor illegally, remained, assigning the early expiration of his term as his reason for so doing. A large iron bar, with which the lock to the cell was broken, was found inside, and in the yard a dull used in making a hole in the northwest wall. Outside help had evidently been given them. At 6 o'clock to-night none of them had been captured.

The Board of Supervisors have recently contracted for a new jail, work upon which will soon begin.
